six years ago a royal commission under the presidency of lord hartington was known to be inquiring into the administration of the national defence there was much talk in the newspapers about the prussian staff and many were the advocates of its imitation in this country very few of those who took part in the discussions seemed to know what the prussian staff was and i thought it might be useful to the royal commission and to the public to have a true account of that institution written in plain english so that any one could understand it the essay was published on the 11th of february 1890 the day on which the report of lord hartington s commission was signed the essential feature of the prussian staff system consists in the classification of duties out of which it has arisen every general in the field requires a number of assistants collectively forming his staff to relieve him of matters of detail to act as his confidential secretaries and to represent him at places where he cannot be himself the duties of command are so multifarious that some consistent distribution of functions among the officers of a large staff is indispensable in prussia this distribution is based on a thoroughly rational and practical principle the general s work is subdivided into classes according as it is concerned with administration and discipline or with the direction of the operations against the enemy all that belongs to administration and discipline is put upon one side of a dividing line and upon the other side all that directly affects the preparation for or the management of the fighting in technical language all that falls within the domain of strategy and tactics the officers entrusted with the personal assistance of the general in this latter group of duties are in prussia called his general staff they are specially trained in the art of conducting operations against an enemy that is in the specific function of generalship which has thus in the prussian army received more systematic attention than in any other in the british army the assistants of a general are also grouped into classes for the performance of specific functions in his relief but the grouping of duties is accidental and follows no principle it has arisen by chance and been stereotyped by usage the officers of a staff belong to the adjutant general s branch or to the quartermaster general s branch but no rational criterion exists by which to discover whether a particular function falls to one branch or to the other that this is an evil is evident because it is manifest that there can be no scientific training for a group of duties which have no inherent affinity with one another the evil has long been felt for the attempt has been made to remedy it by amalgamating the two branches in order to sever them again upon a rational plane of cleavage but while the essence of the prussian general staff lies deeply embedded in the organization of the prussian army the interest of the general public has been attracted by the fact that the great strategist to whom the victories of 1866 and 1870 are ascribed was not the commander of the prussian army but merely the chief of the general staff of a royal commander in chief it may well be doubted whether this feature of the prussian system is suitable for imitation elsewhere the germans themselves evidently regard it as accidental rather than essential for in organizing their navy they have after much experiment and deliberation adopted a different plan they have appointed their chosen admiral to be not chief of the staff to an emperor who in war as he takes the field with the army cannot undertake the command of the navy but to be the commanding admiral to be continue in this ebook
